Humanitarian Architecture: Guest Lecture from Alumnus Brett Moore

Above: Brett giving a guest lecture to students in our Gatta Studio.

Below: A slide from the presentation talking about influencing factors in humanitarian policy development.

We were thrilled to have 1995 alumnus Brett Moore visit us this month and offer a guest lecture on his work coordinating emergency housing and shelter to populations around the world. Brett has an incredible career in international humanitarian and development planning, leading him to work in more than 20 countries over the last 25 years with NGOs, government projects, and 13 years with the United Nations High Commission for Refugees as Chief of Shelter and Settlements and coordinating the Global Shelter Cluster. Thank you Brett, for sharing your expertise with our students!

Food Security and Global Stability: A Visit to FAO

As part of our Nutrition course “Italian Culture Through Food and Society”, students visited the headquarter office of the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO). As a specialized United Nations agency, FAO works to combat hunger and improve nutrition and food security worldwide, acting as a neutral forum for nations to negotiate and debate food and agriculture policy, as well as providing development assistance and conducting research on related topics. Our students visited FAO, including their interactive Museum and Network exhibition, to expand their understanding of international food systems and humanitarian intervention for vulnerable communities.
